Butler Asks Daniels Some Sensational Questions at Naval Hearing

RUSSIA HAS OUR GUN DESIGNS

Daniels Says Never Heard of It; Butler Can "Give the History"

Washington, D. C., April 4.—Representative Butler, of the House naval committee, Republican, questioning Secretary Daniels, asked yesterday if it were important that navy secrets be kept confidential.

"Of course," said Mr. Daniels. "Don't you know that the design of our guns has been turned over to the Russian government during our administration?" demanded Mr. Butler.

"I never heard of it," said the secretary. "I think I can give you the history of that," said Mr. Butler, but dropped the subject for the time. Later he asked the secretary to ask Admiral Strauss, chief of the bureau of ordnance, for a letter written by the admiral two years ago to the Krupp factory in Germany with regard to the navy 14-inch guns. Mr. Daniels agreed to do so.

Representative Butler asked if Secretary Daniels did not believe the American navy should be in the second place. "I do not think we can or ought to figure on any particular nation's strength in laying out our policy," replied Secretary Daniels. "I do not believe this Congress should tax the people this year to make up the deficiencies of twenty years. We ought to lay out a strong program and build to that. I think this Congress ought to authorize the biggest program ever authorized. More than that, it ought to fit out our navy yards for building ships. I do not think conditions are so urgent that we should let private builders they must lay aside other work."

Secretary Daniels opposed any amendment to the armor plate bill now before the committee and opposed a plan to have the federal trade commission determine the cost of armor manufacture and, with that figure as a basis, have the secretary fix the price of armor for ten years. If the private manufacturers failed to enter into a contract within thirty days after the price was fixed the government plant would be built.

Yesterday was Dr. Daniels' third day on the witness stand. The committee will end its hearings this week, as soon as the secretary completes his statement.

which thus far has been in the nature of a general review of the needs of the service. The hearings began early in December. The committee will halt its hearings to-day for a few minutes to vote on the government armor plate factory bill passed by the Senate recently.

"I am opposed to any amendment to the Senate bill," said Secretary Daniels. "I am afraid of the Greeks bearing gifts. I do not believe Congress should put this matter of dealing with a monopoly in the hands of any secretary. I believe this plant should be built now."

A BROKEN HEART

Blamed for the Death of Dr. Theodore B. Sachs.

Chicago, April 4.—Friends and members of lodges to which Dr. Theodore B. Sachs belonged yesterday completed arrangements for the funeral of the late head of the Chicago municipal tuberculosis sanatorium and president of the National Tuberculosis association, who was found dead of poison Sunday.

Dr. Sachs' death at Naperville, Ill., where he was chief of the medical staff, came as a climax to a controversy over his management of the municipal sanatorium. Statements by his friends asserted that charges of mismanagement broke his heart, as he had devoted a long term of years to the institution.

Friends of the doctor issued statements in which they declared that he had been "killed by the spoils system of city politics."

A STEEP ADVANCE IN WHEAT PRICES

Broad Activity Follows News that Crop Will Be 165,000,000 Bushels Less Than 1915 Yield.

Chicago, April 4.—Wheat prices made an unusually steep advance yesterday, and the market showed broad activity as a result of estimates that the crop of winter wheat in the United States this year would be 165,000,000 bushels less than the yield harvested in 1915. Profit taking was heavy during the advance, but all the offerings were readily absorbed, with foreigners taking part in the buying.

July delivery showed the greatest upturn, of about five cents a bushel above Saturday's finish. The close yesterday was at virtually the topmost price of the season and 13½c higher than the lowest quotation a week ago.
